Seismic analysis is a subset of structural analysis and is the calculation of the response of a building (or nonbuilding) structure to earthquakes. It is part of the process of structural design, earthquake engineering or structural assessment and retrofit (see structural engineering) in regions where earthquakes are prevalent.. As seen in the figure, a building has the potential to 'wave' back ...

Design specifications. The AP1000 is a pressurized water reactor with two cooling loops, planned to produce a net power output of 1,117 MW e. It is an evolutionary improvement on the AP600, essentially a more powerful model with roughly the same footprint.. A design objective was to be less expensive to build than other Generation III reactor designs, by both using existing technology, and ...
